Diverse investors warm to financial advice

Key findings from our 2023 Annual Retirement Study

More Black and Hispanic Americans are working with financial professionals after recent declines – a major finding from the 2023 Annual Retirement Study from Allianz Life Insurance Company of North America (Allianz).

At the same time as more Black and Hispanic Americans are engaging with professional financial advisors, their financial confidence is increasing too. This could be the result of receiving guidance from a financial professional. Working with a financial professional can help Americans secure their financial future and reach their retirement goals.

23% of Black/African Americans said they would like to work with an advisor who has “similar characteristics to me, such as similar age, gender, or race.”

Many Black and Hispanic Americans are engaging with financial professionals again

Less than half of all Americans say they are currently working with a financial professional.

Still, many who work with a financial professional say they don’t discuss certain issues with their advisor and instead use other resources to find solutions.

“Right now, how confident do you feel about being able to financially support all the things you want to do going forward in your life?”
People from varying backgrounds have different financial goals.

- Paying off credit card debt is a top financial goal for 38% of Black and Hispanic Americans, compared to 30% of all Americans.
- Saving enough and making plans to live a comfortable retirement is a top goal for 45% of all Americans, while only 36% of Black Americans said the same.
- Leaving a legacy for family is a top goal for 31% of Black Americans, compared to 23% of all Americans.
